Better for Broadway.

The Common Council is busy with projects for relieving Broadway. If it will only do away with the public well, the public will feel grateful. From time immemorial schemes of this sort have been suggested, discussed, inquired into and laid aside. Nothing has ever come of any of them—partly because they were calumnies, partly because private interests offered opposition, and partly because they were never taken hold of in earnest. We hope for better luck this time.

Mayor Wood's recommendation, in the first place, ought immediately to be adopted. So far as it goes it is practical and effective. The only trouble is to widen,—upon which, indeed, the time to the value of property would far more than pay the whole expense. The question of cost, though important, is a secondary matter in comparison with the advantage. The street is well known to be one of the busiest in the world, and the City will show a very feeble grasp of the City Hall. A chance at a small outlay, which would greatly relieve the whole, through which it would pass, is not to be borne in mind that at present it is a small matter to widen Broadway, and that never again hope to be able to do it. Centuries hence, very property and premises between the Battery and Union Square will be worth ten times what they are now, and it will require very little foresight to see that the time to widen Broadway is now.

Mr. Mayor, remember Broadway, and do not allow it to be narrowed by a single inch. Centuries hence, when the Corporation of New-York shall be counted among the dead, and the Battery and Union Square shall be the centre of a great city, the Chronicler will mention you as the man who saved Broadway.

The Common Council have bit upon the right plan for this purpose, which is simply this: If one Broadway is not enough, make another. It is proposed to open a new thoroughfare, beginning through the city, parallel to Broadway, on each side of it, and near enough to accommodate passengers by the public conveyances, and take off a portion of the travel. This may be done with less difficulty than would at first appear. The Corporation owns a large number of lots on the line of the proposed street, which it will require very little money to open. Both ranged lots on the Commissioners' map of the city, and the Corporation has the power to make the necessary openings between the streets already laid out. Let the Corporation, then, open a street from Canal-street to the Battery, and the thing is done. Let it be 100 feet wide, and it will require very little money to make it equal to Broadway in every respect
